advocals recordings On the surface I would say that isnt necessarily a bad thing. Considering that he was released in the early 90s as far as music goes, his fans pretty much expected a certain type of sound and thats what we got. Its fair to say that he wouldnt be a household name if this was the case. I mean hes practically indestructible, in my opinion at least, and his work would be fondly remembered if this was the case. But his songs just didnt have a whole lot of radio appeal, they never really got big airplay, they never really cracked the top 10, they never reached the mainstream radio play. You know, the kind of songs you hear that by number of play on the radio, that kind of thing. No his music never really got in the mainstream. If you re-watched the early days of the 2000's, just about everyone couldnt stop singing the words to the Back to Black theme tune. But you can never take that away from him, he made it huge and it will always be thanks to the genius of him, Ms. Isabella Summers and the rest of the great team that he had. What we really should try and reflect on here is how much of a great artist he actually is. We should all be thankful for how great he is and how influential he is. Because thats all we really want to be is great. Theres nothing wrong with being a great artist. If you re-watch videos of him youd see that hes pretty damn good at what he does. He was always a great front man, a great vocalist, he was a great guitar player, and he was a great songwriter. He was a one of a kind. He was a character, and a very powerful and well rounded person. He was never just a solo artist, he was always part of a great band. And he really should be the only reason why we are talking about him here. His music was never on its own anyway. His music was always great, but it was really on its own when he was part of a really great band like the Rolling Stones. I feel like the sad thing is we really lost something because we lost him. The thing that makes it all worth it, is the fact that he was the greatest artist of his generation. He was the most influential artist of his generation. He was the most influential artist for a generation, period. But thats why 82157476af
